2025 NRR CAT KING COLE NCHA SUPER STAKES

ARENA FOOTING STUDY

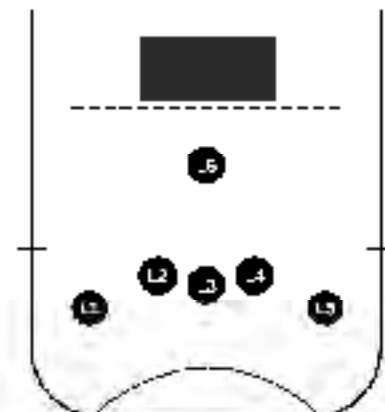

OVERVIEW

Texas A&M University researchers will be conducting a study to evaluate arena footing characteristics and their response over time during the 2025 NRR Cat King Cole NCHA Super Stakes. Objectives of this study includes:

- Quantify key arena footing characteristics using a suite of mechanical testing equipment and laboratory analysis.
- Identify the effects of competition on footing characteristics.
- Gather subjective evaluations from exhibitors and industry professionals.

WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW

This research will be performed in three different segments, targeted towards the beginning, middle and end of the Super Stakes. During the dates of March 19th, 20th, 31st and April 1st, 9th and 10th, the John Justin Arena will be closed from 6am - 7am and immediately following completion of each day's competition for data collection.

Testing will occur at six specific locations (depicted in the lower left corner) to assess and compare high versus low impact areas. Characteristics to be identified in each location includes stiffness, hardness, penetration resistance, depth, shear strength, moisture content, and more. Small soil samples will be collected for material analysis of mechanical and index properties. Ambient temperature and humidity will be monitored, along with maintenance practices.

The equipment being used is relatively noninvasive and will not change the current state of the footing. The arena will be drug post-testing to ensure a smooth, and fair competition surface.

OUTCOMES

This study will contribute to a better understanding of how arena footing characteristics change throughout an event, and how various factors influence these developments. It will have practical implications for improving arena management practices and enhancing the welfare of cutting horses. While this research may not provide all of the answers regarding optimal ground conditions, it serves as a foundational step to addressing these questions.

WANT TO HELP?

We are asking for industry input on the quality of footing during the 2025 NRR Cat King Cole Super Stakes and the importance of these characteristics.

Scan the QR code to take the survey. It takes less than five minutes to complete! Your feedback is greatly appreciated. Participants must be:

- At least 18 years old
- Compete during the Super Stakes and/or be directly associated with an exhibitor or horse
